

Teaching older adults in university courses

November 9 | 9:30 to 11 am

Meeting via WebEx. Registration required for meeting.

This workshop is open to UM faculty and instructors

The age-friendly university (AFU) movement encourages universities to engage older people in all aspects of the university. Importantly, as an AFU we are encouraged to ensure that there are good opportunities for lifelong learning and inter-generational engagement. One way to engage older people and provide inter-generational opportunities is through for-credit courses that are already offered.

Join the Centre on Aging for a workshop, where faculty from the University of Manitoba and Brandon University will share their perspectives on teaching older adults in University courses.

Registration details are available on the Centre's Events web page.
