Course Description:
This course examines the history of Catholicism from its origins in the time of Jesus to the period of challenge for the Church in the sixteenth century. The course will consider Catholicism’s fascinating history and examine the Church at the institutional, local, and personal levels. We will examine the ways in which Catholicism was formed as well as the ways in which Catholicism helped form the communities in which it operated. In examining the Catholic Church in historical perspective, we will attempt to understand how the present-day Church was made, examine what Catholicism’s past can tell us about its present and its future, and discuss how historians have understood and written about the Catholic Church.

Course format:
We meet three times a week through the weeks of the semester. Readings from Justo Gonzalez’s The Story of Christianity, vol. 1 provide the background for exploration and discussion of major issues. Friday classes will be seminars, in which students will examine and discuss primary and secondary source material. Students should come to these seminar classes prepared to engage in class debates, and to discuss these sources in detail.
