“Giving and Receiving Feedback: Evidence-based Approaches to Enhancing Learning Conversations”

Ivan Silver, MD, FRCPC

Dr. Ivan Silver has enjoyed a career in medical education focusing on both continuing professional development and faculty development. He was the inaugural director of the Centre for Faculty Development in the Faculty of Medicine at the University of Toronto from 2002-2009 and later the Vice-Dean of CPD at the University of Toronto (2005-2011). More recently he was the inaugural Vice-President of Education at the Centre for Addiction and Mental Health, from 2012-2018. Dr. Silver is an award winning medical educator and a full Professor in the Department of Psychiatry at the University of Toronto. He also continues an active clinical practice in geriatric psychiatry at the Centre for Addiction and Mental Health. He is continuing his education research and scholarship in the areas of feedback, professionalism, the imposter syndrome and continuing professional and faculty development.

Effective communication is central to the feedback process for learners to develop as professionals. Come learn what are some evidence-supported approaches to enhance this essential activity!

At the end of this presentation, participants will be able to:

1. Reframe feedback as a learning conversation;
2. Describe an evidence-based 4 stage feedback model for providing feedback and coaching for change; and
3. Apply what you have learned to the way you are currently providing feedback.
