City

Caen

Caen is known for its historical buildings built during the reign of William the Conqueror, who was buried there, and for the Battle for Caen—heavy fighting that took place in and around Caen during the Battle of Normandy in 1944, destroying much of the city.

Two hours north-west of Paris, and connected to the south of England by the Caen-(Ouistreham)-Portsmouth ferry route, Caen is located in the centre of its northern region, over which it is a centre of political, economic and cultural power.

As the city of William the Conqueror, the city has a long and complex history. In the Second World War, it was a key site of the Battle of Normandy, and suffered considerable destruction. The city has preserved the memory by erecting a memorial for peace.

Located a few miles from the coast, the landing beaches, the bustling resort of Deauville and Cabourg, Norman Switzerland or Pays d'Auge (often considered the archetype of Normandy), Caen offers all possible services.

Deauville

Deauville is a famous tourist resort where several prestige events are organized such as the American movie festival, the Asian movie festival and frequent prestige horse races.

Le Havre

Le Havre is the biggest container harbour in France.

The city Centre of Le Havre has been part of the UNESCO World Heritage since 2005 for its "innovative utilization of concrete's potential."

Le Havre and Deauville are located directly on the seaside.
