HOW TAKING PICTURES affects experiences and memories

Picture-taking has become ubiquitous in everyday life. From eating a meal to watching a concert, these days hardly a situation exists in which individuals do not feel compelled to take pictures. Yet, prior literature has not devoted any attention to the effect taking pictures has on people’s experiences, probably because until recently pictures were taken sparsely and predominantly at special occasions (e.g., weddings, etc.).

Friday, March 14
9:00 am
336 School of Art

GUEST SPEAKER:
Dr. Kristin Diehl
Associate Professor of Marketing
USC Marshall School of Business