Armes Building

The Armes Building is named in recognition of Dr. Henry Percy Armes, former Head of the Chemistry department, Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Science, and Dean of the University. As Dean of the University, Armes provided invaluable counsel to the President on administrative issues. Armes also served as the acting President of the university while a permanent replacement was sought. In addition to his commitment to university education and administration, Armes fought valiantly in the First World War and had a leg amputated as a result of a wound incurred in battle.
