Max Bell Centre

Prior to the construction of the Max Bell Centre, a referendum was held asking students if they would be willing to share in the costs of building the facility. Teams on each side of the issue received $300, from the University of Manitoba Students Union (UMSU), to promote their cause. The results of the referendum stated that students did not want to financially contribute to the building, but the decision was nullified by UMSU when it was determined that the "no" supporters had not provided the financial details of their campaign, creating suspicion that they surpassed the $300 promotions cap.
