The namesake of the John A. Russell Building implemented the first architectural research program at the University of Manitoba shortly following the Second World War while acting as Director of the then School of Architecture. The program dealt with special planning programs involved in the design and construction of farmhouses. Russell managed to acquire the support of the three Prairie Provinces and the federal government to assist farmers in the modernization of their homes.