University College

W.L. Morton founded University College in 1963. Morton attempted to create an identity for the college inspired by the customs at Oxford University. Members of the college were expected to wear burgundy gowns, have their own tutor, and eat a set number of meals at the “high table” in the college dining room, the Great Hall. Morton’s vision was eventually abandoned since, among other grievances, the students disliked the gowns, the tutors had no academic authority.