WHATNOW is a new conversation series to take place in an impromptu manner, about whatever subject that emerges at the school, in the corridors, in class, in studio, etc. The theme for the first WHATNOW is TOGETHER, an inviting conversation as we return to school after two-plus years of a pandemic. Please, join for the first conversation this coming Monday, September 12, @ 12:00-1:00 pm, Room 208, Arch2. The interlocutors are our special guest Dr. Jeanne Randolph, Dean Mimi Locher, and Professor Richard Milgron. Bring your questions and stories about being together again! Thank you DoA and Professor Brian T. Rex.

Jeanne Randolph is an independent intellectual whose most recent book, My Claustrophobic Happiness mocks the insanity of materialism. Her writings interpret North American culture psychoanalytically and philosophically, reflecting her disdain for advertising and consumerism, her paranoia about The Technological Ethos, and her cavalier attitude toward a multitude of topics including Barbie Dolls, American football, Las Vegas, Halloween candy, aphids, Wittgenstein, haute couture, ethics, and hysteria.
