What is intersectionality?

- A process of including the influence of multiple and overlapping factors of diversity when considering life chances and outcomes
- Factors can be
 - Ascribed: assigned at birth (e.g., skin colour)
 - Achieved: traits that are earned or gained (i.e., education, class) or acquired (e.g., disability)
- Examines the influence of two or more ascribed and/or attained characteristics on a life outcome
- The “trinity” of sex, class and race are the three factors most commonly examined

What is the policy context of intersectional research?

- “The key challenge for researchers and policy makers interested in issues of diversity is to determine where, how, and why various types of identities intersect” and how they influence various life outcomes.
- Yet programs need to be cost-effective and flexible and serve a large number of diverse people with differing needs

Western Canada Settlement Survey and IMDB

- Western Canada Settlement Survey
 - Random samples drawn from a CIC data file
 - Included all immigrants over 18 years, who landed between January 1, 2007 and December 31, 2012 in MB, SK, AB, BC, YK, NWT, NT
 - Indicated intention to reside in target province or territory.
 - Telephone survey conducted in March 2013
 - N: 3,006
 - Response rate: 27%
- IMDB
 - Links landing records file with tax records file
 - All immigrants arriving between 1980 and 2010

Table 1: Immigrants by Entrance Class and Sex 2012

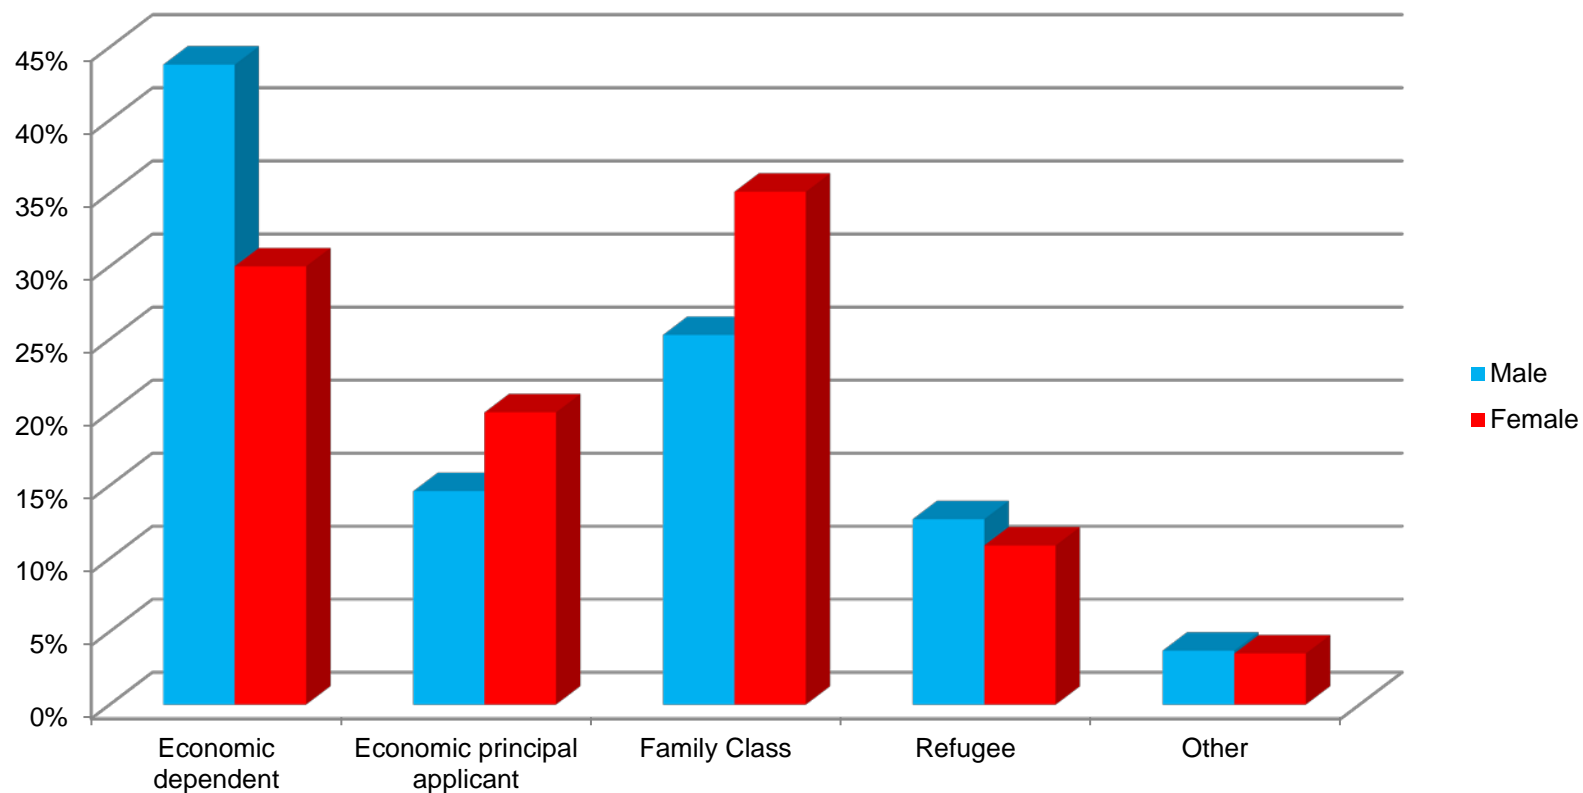

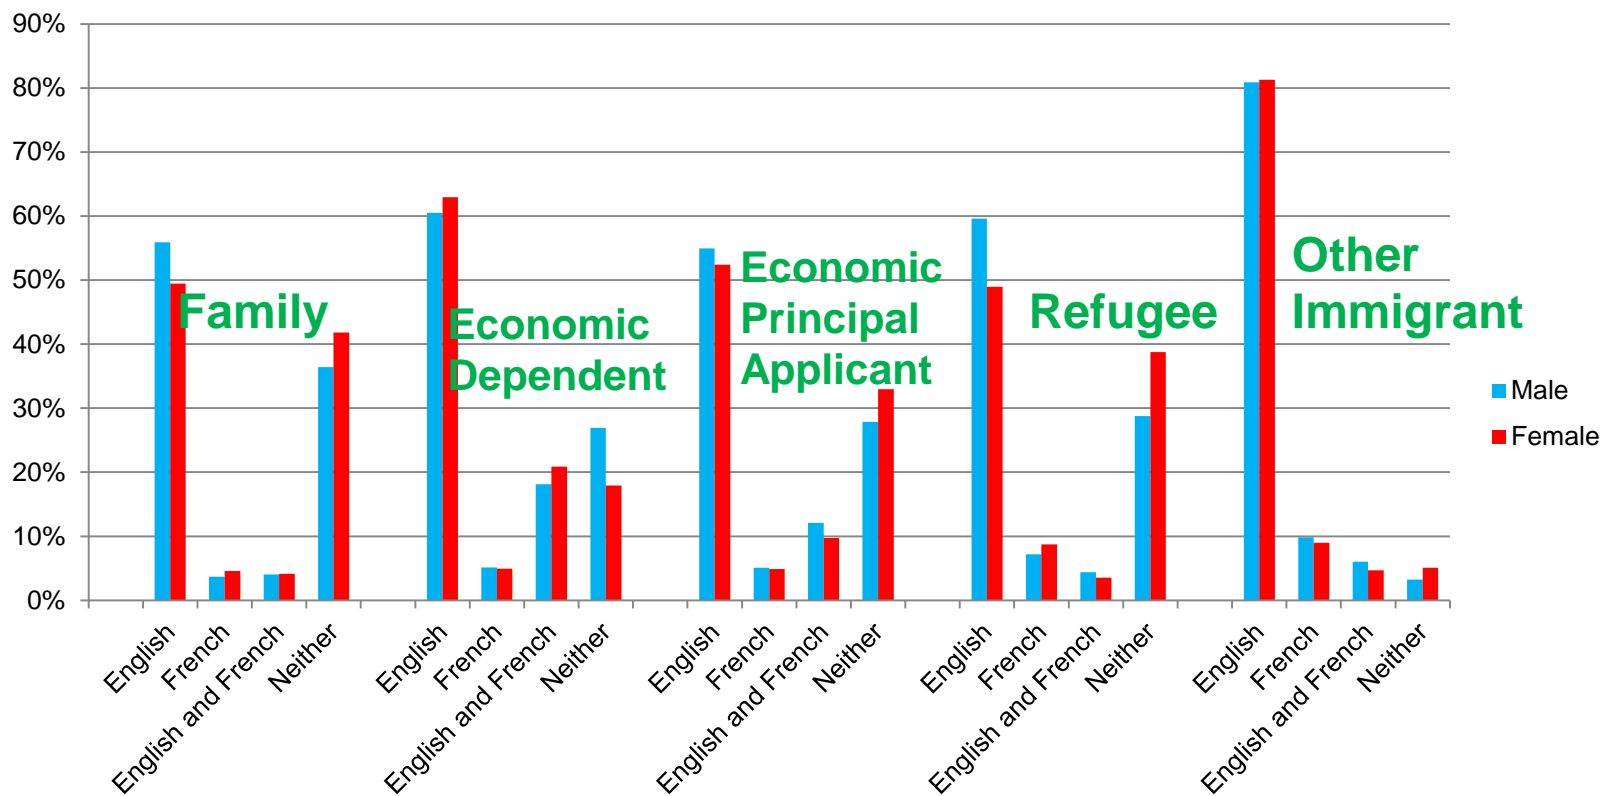

Table 2: Language by Entrance Class and Sex, 2000-2010

Identities and statuses influence accessibility of settlement services for immigrants

- Language fluency at entry different for dependents and among entrance classes
- Class of entry influences the number and services that can be accessed
 - Those on temporary workers visas aren't eligible for any settlement services
- Dependents may not be eligible for some settlement & language services

Who Accesses Services? (part 1)
Service Use by Sex, 2013

	Male	Female
Yes	33%	33%
No	67%	67%

Note: $P < 0.371$ (no sex differences)

Who accesses services? (Part 2)

Service Use by Entrance Class and Sex, 2013

	Male		Female
	Yes	No	Yes	No
Skilled worker	37%	63%	37%	63%
Family	24%	76%	28%	73%
Provincial nominee	32%	68%	40%	60%
Refugee	61%	39%	53%	47%
Other	32%	69%	32%	68%

Note: P<0.001 for males and females

Who accesses services? (Part 3)

Service Use by Various Characteristics, 2013

- African Newcomers: Male (1.7X), French speaking (3.3X), Refugee (2.6X), newly arrived (0.6X)
- Asian Newcomers: Refugee (4.3X), University-educated outside of Canada (1.4X), newly arrived (0.7X), older
- European newcomers: University-educated outside of Canada (2.2X), newly arrived (0.6X), English language fluency problems (0.6X)

What are the policy considerations of these intersections?

- Should/can we be creating special services for all intersecting groups?
- Could existing infrastructure be reorganized to address the difficulties in accessing services?
 - Do we need new infrastructure?
- Who will design the program? Who will run the program?
- How much will it cost? Who will fund the program?
- Is there a likelihood that a change in external conditions might influence service use?
 - Change in worldwide refugee-like situations
 - Change in Canadian immigration policies regarding labour and language knowledge
- Is there support from stakeholders?
 - Constituents, immigrant community, service providers, government & private funders, citizens
- Will support for targeted services undermine established services for others?

What are the limitations of the intersectional approach?

- Definitions of identities may change
 - Changes to immigration categories; methodological disputes regarding age
- Some identities change throughout the lifecourse
 - Immigrants become naturalized citizens
 - Young become old
- There remains a tendency to prioritize some identities over others

Moving forward

- Current policies for marginalized groups deal with only one identity
 - e.g. Indian Act, Multiculturalism Act
- Policies intended to address inequality are sometimes construed as reverse racism or sexist. We need an education strategy
 - e.g. belief that all indigenous peoples receive free post-secondary education
