Published annually and usually on a deficit basis by the Manitoba Law Students' Association for the students of the Faculty of Law, University of Manitoba, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada, North America. The contents of this book may seem fictional, but truth is stranger than fiction. Any resemblance to real persons is probably coincidental. "Peanuts" is the world's favourite comic strip appearing in over 2000 newspapers worldwide with an estimated daily readership of 100 million. This yearbook has a readership of 120. Single copies $25. No portion of this book may be reproduced physically or electronically without the express written permission of the MLSA and Hockey Night in Canada. Dean's Message

This yearbook, in times to come, will be a valued keepsake, recalling the friends, activities and associations of your law school years. We are grateful to the editor and the others whose efforts have made possible its publication.

Our own memories of this graduating class will remain fresh. We hope you have enjoyed your time here at Robson Hall as much as we enjoyed having you here, and we thank you for your many contributions to the School, especially your cooperation and assistance as some important changes and improvements in the curriculum were made and your generous commitment to support the Faculty in its work hereafter.

Fortunately, our association with you does not now end, but merely enters another phase in which we shall have much to do together — the School as a centre of legal education and research, you as graduates and members of a learned profession — in a mutually supportive and creative relationship serving the public interest in improving always the law and its administration.

In your future, you may play many roles, assume and discharge varied responsibilities, encounter many different challenges and experiences. In whatever you undertake, we wish you that special satisfaction that is earned by work well and cheerfully done in service to others. I know that one example of such dedication and competence you will remember is that of Professor Gordon Dilts who has never measured or begrudged any of the countless hours in which over these past two decades he has shared with students his understanding, knowledge, enthusiasm and high standards and expectations as a teacher of the arts and duties of the advocate and counsellor.

Richard Alcock Richard Alcock: of whom Roland Penner, former Attorney-General of Manitoba, once said, "Who?" Richard requires just three things in order to study: coffee, a cigarette, and plenty of noise. Whether studying the practicalities of administrative law, or the esoterics of jurisprudence, Richard can only concentrate when surrounded by the gabble and chatter of the Law School Common Room. While expected to join a prominent law firm, it is suspected that Richard will only settle for a desk set up in the firm's front lobby.

Ross Antymniuk What is truly amazing about this tall dark Ukrainian is the fact that despite his many diversions — waiting tables at some of Winnipeg's finest defunct restaurants, acting as student benchner (no one is quite sure what this means), and skiing, among others — Ross still managed to graduate (he may have achieved this by borrowing Hart Berger's notes).

Ross will be moving his red ink-well and crossword prowess from the back row of Wills class to Wolch Pinx. Does anyone know a three letter word for Public Safety Building?

Linda Barker Linda has taken a decidedly radical approach to the fine art of advocacy. She has the unfortunate habit of advancing carefully reasoned and incisive arguments, when the situation clearly calls for ill-considered and vociferous debate. It is widely hoped that she will be elevated to the bench at the earliest opportunity, for as an advocate, her arguments being bereft of all sophistry, she will almost certainly undermine the adversarial system.

Mark Beard Mark's claim to notoriety, Beer 'n Skits brawling excepted, is his disturbing habit of crossing out massive passages of exam answers two-thirds of the way through on the ground that he wasn't "precisely" answering that which the question asked. Pavlov would suggest that given this set of stimuli, heart failure or fibrillations at least would be the appropriate response. Wrong, dog breath! For you see it's no secret that Mark has the emotional elasticity of Mr. Spock. Rather, at that moment, his mind autonomically becomes a tabula rasa, then the neurons start firing, ultimately culminating in a pithy yet logical riposte.

In any event, Mark will be plying his craft at McJannet Weinberg next year. One can be sure that despite his incredulous tendency, he will prove to be a respected resource there as he proved to be for so many of the faithful at Robson Hall.

Evelyn Bernstein Robson Hall's designated shopper. Ev's designer wardrobe has bedazzled us all these past three years. Her high standards also extend to the campus cafeterias where her discriminating taste buds have been known to demand, "Is that cream cheese fresh?" Ev still whines about the first time she ever had to take the bus, which was in 2nd year when her car got towed on Broadway and she had to bus it to the compound. Ev will be leaving the U. of M. a legacy of about $300 worth of unpaid parking tickets. After articling, Ev and her hubby Dr. Chutch will be heading for Los Angeles where Chutch, like it or not, will probably be subsidizing the shops of Rodeo Drive. Good luck at Norman S. Gould, Evy!

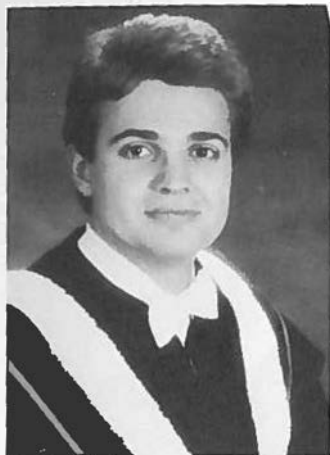

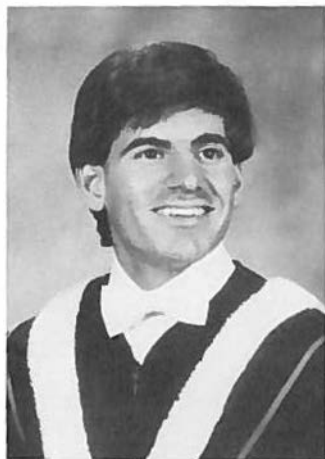

Lisa Bohonos The anticipation of making the megabucks articling at Thompson Dorfman Sweatman has transformed Lisa from a fun-loving, down-to-earth, apartment dweller into a high-aspiring River Heights homeowner (... well ... close, anyway). Rumour has it that she also discarded a Rabbit for a flashy red sports truck — a fact which is as yet unsubstantiated since the proof is supposedly always in the repair shop. And why is it that she is often conspicuously absent from her 8:30 insurance classes? Could it be that she's cavorting with a certain basketball player? (A reliable source has it that she's been seen with "Dr.J"!) Stay tuned for the exciting conclusion of A Year In The Life of Lisa (although you can be sure it is going to have one of those sappy happy endings!)

Peter Bruckshaw Peter has the appearance of a smooth corporate lawyer, a yearning to defend the criminal element, and the transportation of a maintenance man. His hopes for the future are no more parking tickets, a criminal clientele of sophistication, and a Crown Attorney with a sense of humour.

Stuart Blake "Stuey", a squire of Charleswood and "friend of Winnipeg South", had to find time for Law School in an otherwise hectic lifestyle. Aside from mastering the finer points of Admin. Law, Tax, and driving a new RX-7, Stuart tended store for the MLCC, wrestled with the art of Library Nap-time, "curled" his way to Lawyer/Student infamy and tamed the wilds of Africa on a summer safari. Next up — a sidelight in practice with D'Arcy and Deacon.

Leroy Bleta Ode to a Torontonian: From the east came a man with a mission, To read the law and fulfill his ambition, To practice the law with the utmost precision, For more than nominal consideration; And now that he has earned his law degree, A corporate lawyer he soon will be, Back in Toronto to fight with Revenue Canada (R.C.), Under the name of Del Zotto Zorzi!

Caroline Cortens This sheep rancher has provided law school with a little country atmosphere with her "Hi, thar!" greeting. Caroline, though, will best be remembered for her fine taste in foods exemplified by her practice of drinking tea through a straw. Not to be outdone, Caroline was one of the many students to get the marriage bug over the past three years. Thank goodness — now she doesn't move every two months. Caroline is going to the Department of Justice next year and will do great as long as she can wear flat shoes. Good luck, Caroline!

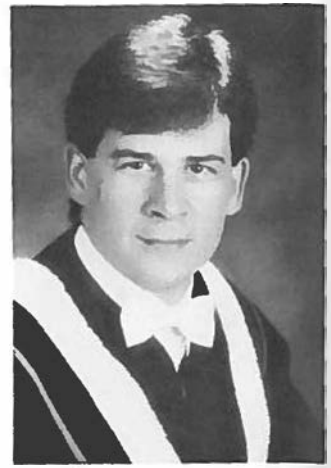

Phillip Cramer Editor, choose from the following: (1) Phillip Cramer is short — and so is his write-up; (2) Phillip Cramer is pictured above; (3) This is an old picture of Phillip Cramer; (4) Phillip Cramer appears here because Dustin Hoffman was busy; (5) Phillip Cramer knows what happened to Jimmy Hoffa. Randolph, my favourite is number (2)! (Signed) Your friend, Phillip.

You mean I have to work with these guys next year?

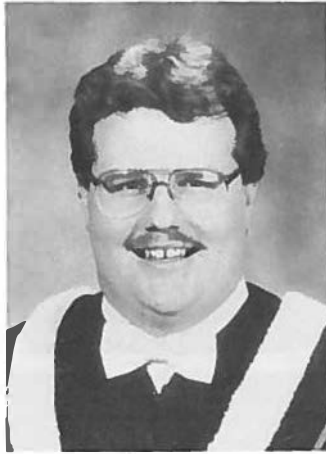

Mary Curtis You can count the number of times Mary's been on time for her 8:30 classes on one hand. We don't worry about her though. Mary is very serious about her studies; she has study notes for every course ever taught at Robson Hall. By now everyone knows that when Mary dons her glasses in class, it's not so she can better see the blackboard, it's so she can read the fine print of the Sun's crossword puzzle. Always well-prepared, Mary planned ahead for her year at an articling student's salary. No, she hasn't saved any money, but she did get herself a Gold MasterCard.

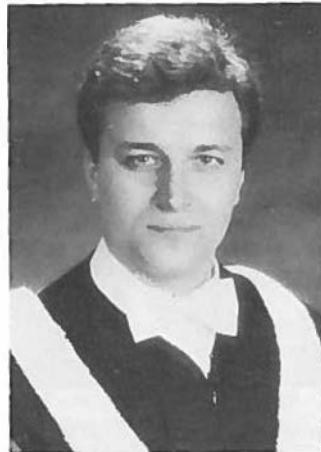

Remo De Sordi Remo is another of the North-Western Ontario "foreigners". His laid-back approach made him a permanent lounge fixture leading many to believe he was yet another Tascona creation. Despite being one of the back-row boys, he managed to obtain (we suggest bribe!) solid academic performances. Resisting the lure of Northern Ontario's deep blue lakes, Remo will be articling with the firm of McJannet, Weinberg, and Rich.

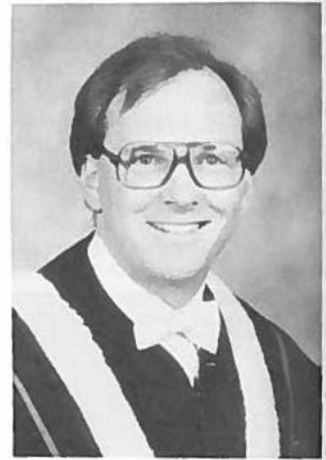

Lori Dobbie Lori made the Dean's Team in second year, no doubt largely based on her "A" in Tax. She enjoys Intensive Crim but plans on becoming a corporate hotshot at Buchwald, Asper. If you've noticed her pearly whites, you won't be surprised that she is marrying her favourite dentist in June 1989. Good luck in the future!

Tony Fletcher Mr. Litigator has left his mark at the U. of M. Tony "did" lunch with Geraldine Ferraro, obtained the highest Legal Research & Writing grade, was a Solomon Greenberg Finalist and kept 2 janitors employed full time at Robson Hall — cleaning up his trail of Coke cans and potato chip bags. Tony's on-campus presence will be missed by the canteen at U.C. but the junk food sales will be bombing this summer at Portage and Main when Tony joins Fillmore & Riley.

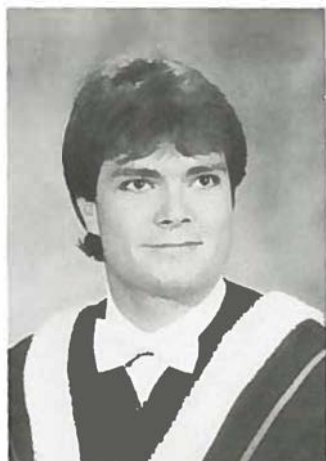

Delano Fullerton In the best pioneer spirit, Del and Shirley left their Calgary home to set up camp in Winnipeg. Here in the mysterious east, Del looks forward to the wonders that wait beyond Transcona. His professional life may well follow that of Horus Rumpole if Del can only learn to temper his good nature.

Jack Fryatt Throughout law school, Jack has kept himself busy in his spare time working for the Liquor Control Commission and taking frequent weekend trips to his shack in the bush. A business law enthusiast, Jack suffered a personal setback early in his Law School Career when his beloved Rambler was fatally hit on St. Anne's Road and Jack was forced to join the rest of the middle class in more dignified transportation. Jack has built a reputation based on his generous post-exam bartending habits. Good luck in the future, Jack!

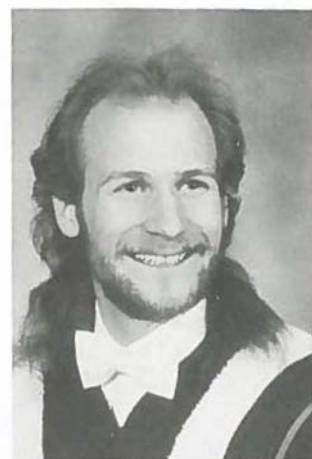

Kim Gilson Kim's words to the wise: "You just can't trust that Lord Denning" endeared her to Professor Edwards (not to mention the rest of his 1st year Contracts class who never had to brief another Denning judgment). One of the hardest working students at Robson Hall, Kim still has time to work on the Law Journal, to perfect her squash game, and to teach all of us computer illiterates how to master that confounding alien machinery in the library. All this is possible, she says, because she allows herself exactly one hour for lunch. Best wishes for next year at Taylor. They are lucky to have you!

Thor Hansell Our resident Viking god cruises to school in his most prized possession — his trusty (or is that rusty!) G.M. truck. Thor is known for his dedication towards hockey, skiing, drinking and sleeping. Studying is conspicuously absent from this list, yet Mr. H. manages to amaze us all with his ability to b.s. his way through cases. Thor is going to Aikens to establish a family dynasty and begin a friendly takeover.

Lynda Carrie Grimes Throughout her law school career, Lynda continually impressed us all with her ability to study while drinking coffee, smoking cigarettes, and doing the cross-word puzzle. She managed to dodge profs' questions by changing her last name at will, but when pressed for an insight into the issue at hand, she always had a great response, despite never having read the case. Lynda managed to fit in a multitude of activities, ranging from working for the Journal, to curling, to supervising youngsters' skating. She got through law school on a total of about 10 hours sleep, yet always had a friendly smile and time for a chat — with the help of yet another cup of coffee! Lynda leaves the law school . . . behind, in a cloud of dust, as she speeds off on yet another pursuit. We wish her well, and hopes she gets an office next to the coffee room.

Chris Harwood-Jones Leaving the intellectually unstable and pigeon-infested halls of the psychology department, Chris entered Law School a wide-eyed, clean shaven young idealist. He generally maintained a low-profile image in Law School, preferring the attractions of "outside interests" (including the Anglican Church, Karate and professional music), but did become involved in his final year when he transformed the unruly mob called the Glee Club into a lean, mean entertainment machine. Finally, despite three years of immersion, a change in marital status and the loss of a razor, Chris retains both youth and idealism as he is turning down the proffered career as a tax lawyer to rent his soul to Rock and Roll for a few years (before ultimately heading off to a seminary).

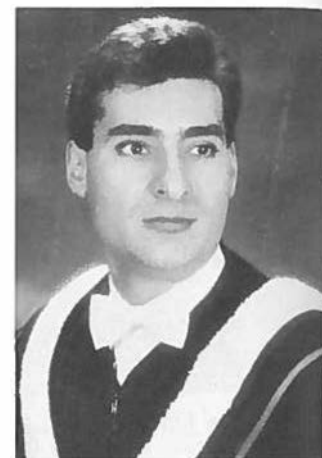

Glen Harasymchuk After graduating from Brandon U with a B.Sc. in computer science, Glen decided that he didn't like the working world, so he followed the glorious path of least resistance to Law School. He reluctantly admits that the highlight of his days at the U of M came during the first year golf tourney where he passed out in the Southwood men's room after entertaining the masses by ingesting a cigar. Good luck at Hunt, Feldstad and try not to spend too much time on the Brandon golf courses.

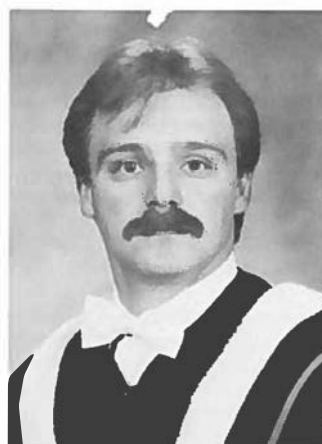

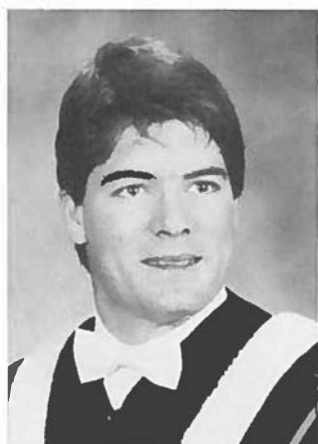

Liz Hawkins Chief Staff Editor of the Manitoba Law Journal, Liz is the exemplar par excellence of English wit, civility, charm and diplomacy (that is, at least in the eyes of persons entirely unfamiliar with the remarkable richness and diversity of Liverpudlian profanity). Although we are saddened by her decision to return to mother England and pursue a legal career there, we can nonetheless look forward, albeit with some trepidation, to the publication of her magnum opus, My Life Among the Colonials.

Carolyn Hunt Our suspicions have been confirmed! Carolyn, mild mannered loser of appendices and wisdom teeth has an evil twin! Her name is Carey and rumour has it that while poor hardworking Carolyn keeps her nose to the grindstone, Carey stands over her cracking the whip and assailing all who come near with her barbed wit and sarcastic demeanour (which we assume she developed during her years at the "Leg") But do not be fooled, for Carey is also clever, she's the one that manages to pull in all the "A's". Good luck — we hope Taylor is ready for the both of you!

Joe Imbrogno Joe came to Robson Hall to get a proper legal education. Instead, Joe nearly broke the record for the most Burtie Bass courses taken by a law student in a 3 year period. Among Joe's fondest memories was the field trip to the Land Titles Office, and being the first one on the pinball machine after Real Estate Transactions class ended. Although one of Robson Hall's quieter students, Joe could always be found near the front of the ethics class reflecting the sun off of his watch on to the clock, or up in the library studying the sunsets. Next year, Joe will be playing his pinball and meteorological skills at Bueti Aquila.

Mike Hicks The big man from the igloos of Leaf Rapids is headed towards the highrises of Bay Street next year. Mike amazed us all in first year with his top of the class marks and his interest in the law. However in second year, he found his girlfriend (now his fiancée) even more interesting! Just because Mike looks like a dumb jock doesn't mean he isn't. Mike brought with him from the U. of W. considerable hockey skills which was apparent when he won MVP for the Bears. While working in Toronto last summer, Mike decided to take up playing rugby as a release for his built-up frustrations because his fiancée was still in Winnipeg. During his third year, Mike spent considerable time in the weight room, hoping to build up his negotiation skills. Without a doubt, Mike will best be remembered as the only person to ever borrow notes from Hart Berger. Good luck in your upcoming marriage and at Fraser & Beatty!

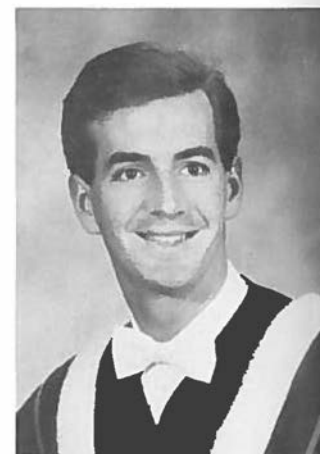

Randy Horton Randy is the only member of our class to have mastered the rules of evidence and the rules of baby-diapering in the same year. However, he was unsuccessful in his attempt to convince his wife that he should be exempt from dealing with the latter, since diapers really fell within the maternal privilege (leave to appeal denied, Randy v. Mom and Tahnee, June '87, Man. C.A.)

Randy has also managed to maintain a steady stream of broken bones and other assorted injuries during his law school career. While he claims that most occurred due to his exploits on the rugby field, rumours persist that many were the result of falling off his chair while dozing off in the back of Wills. Randy also spent much of his final year alternately growing and shaving off his moustache, which enabled him to age five years or lose five years on a regular basis.

Good luck at Monk, Goodwin, Randy!

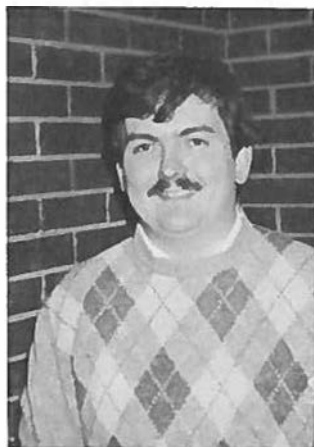

Janet Jeffrey A shoe-in for the award for the law student with the neatest class notes, Janet has kept the manufacturers of white-out and recipe cards in business for the last three years. Her diligence obviously paid off — she was selected as a finalist for the Solomon Greenbergs and won the award for the highest mark in Criminal Law in first year. An avid athlete, Janet participates in all kinds of sports — swimming, football, sponge hockey, squash, and . . . ballroom dancing??? Good luck at Wolch Pinx next year.

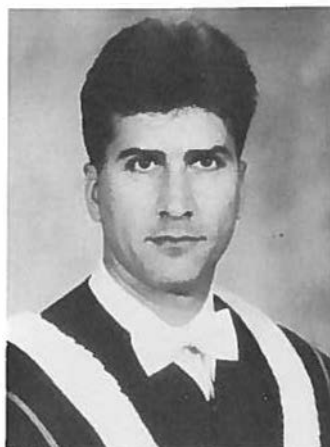

Vince Johnston Not too many accolades can be given this man, the much touted HERO of law school. With straight A's all through law school and winner of all major academic awards, he's the fan's choice for the Gold Medal! He was consulted by the MLSA executive on every major decision and yet has remained humble by only accepting the chairmanship of the Workplace and Safety Committee. As well as all of this, Vince has proved himself a true superstar, excelling in every sport known to man. Vince will be leaving Bugtussel to ply his trade at the renowned firm of Hicks, Morley, Hamilton in T.O.

Suzanne Jones Robson Hall's Hawaiian import (or is that Hawaii's Robson Hall import?) Maybe Newman Maclean will let her set up a Honolulu office. Suzanne, our resident dietician and football bookie, is best known for that fur coat and those wild dives on the volleyball court (thanks to her recent discovery of kneepads!) Suzanne has life in perspective, she always gets those study notes done in one week at the end of term.

Guy Jourdain It takes one year for a civilian lawyer to be de-civilized!

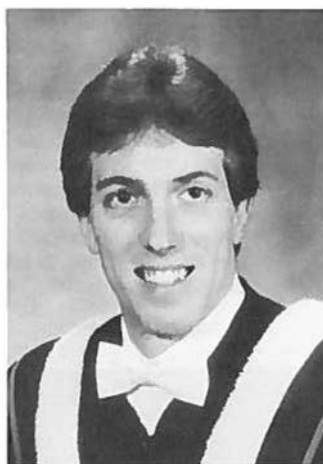

Joel Katz Joel, who is often confused for a taller Robert De Niro, is considered by many of his colleagues in Robson Hall to be the less vociferous philosophical sidekick to Phil Cramer, who is just plain confused. Joel is justly famous for being the Sheik of second-hand chic, and draws his fashion inspirations from such sartorial giants as Professor Harvey and Sneedman and the good Dean Anderson. Having lived for several years on Langside Street, Joel is eminently prepared for his career choice of doing criminal work at Skwark Myers. However, should that not be to his liking, there is always the serving of fried eggs to CA Justices to fall back on.

Jayne Kapac Jayne has spent the last year chained to a computer in the bowels of the earth attending to her onerous duties as Editor-in-Chief of that prestigious publication, the Manitoba Law Journal, emerging from time to time only to attend Tax I and collect endless supplies of coffee and cigarettes. When on these missions, she is occasionally spotted blinking in the bright sunshine and mumbling something about commas and nervous breakdowns. Next year Jayne will be articling at the Public Interest Dept. of Legal Aid where no doubt more of the same peculiar behaviour will be in evidence.

Andrew Kelly Andrew "Racecar" Kelly came to us from the rural circuit where the only entertainment is trying to avoid the ditch (or is that the road?) with your car and watching endless "Gilligan's Island" and "Brady Bunch" reruns (he actually knows the theme songs to these). Andrew will be walking to Wilder, Wilder, Langtry next year as it's just no fun driving downtown, but he hopes to eventually set up a country practice where he can get back into those ditches.

Jeff Kitchen Jeff wandered over here from the engineering building on the other side of the campus. Unfortunately he brought some bad habits with him. One is a tendency to actually listen during lectures. The result has been that Jeff's notes are a fraction of the length of most of his classmates' and actually make sense. This habit of listening too carefully has also caused many a professor to shrink in horror at the sight of Jeff's raised hand.

When he is not listening, Jeff can be found playing basketball or huddled under one of his many sweaters doing research in the frigid atmosphere of the Archives. Hopefully Jeff will get a chance to stop listening and do some talking next year at McJannet Weinberg. That depends, of course, on what his new wife will have to say about the matter.

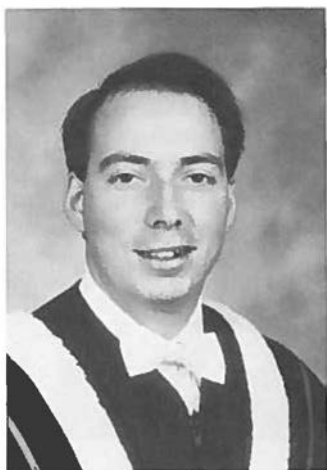

Barbara Kondracki Barb's primary and favourite occupation is as Vince's bench-pressing subject. But when she's looking for more animated activities, she serves on as many law school committees as she can fit into her third priority: school. She took personally Professor Irvine's ethnic accents and references to Olga as a babushka in first year Real Property. Barb also was the creator of "Constitutional Bingo," but she seldom won. "Truth or dare" . . . "You were that young?!" Barb won't have time for her regular sojourns to England when she takes her diligence to the City of Winnipeg Legal Department. Good luck Babs!

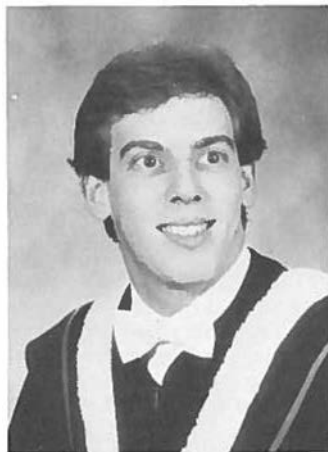

Victor Lee Victor, "Canada's Number One Snoopy Fan," is known for his smooth manner, congenial attitude, and enormous collection of "Peanuts" related clothing and outerwear. An active participant in law school life, Victor was known especially for his dedicated efforts as assistant year-book editor, as well as being a staff member of the Law Journal. Victor's considerable aptitude in the use of computers is explained by the fact that he has achieved a computer science degree, in addition to a B.A. in Canadian Studies. A leading authority on comic strips and cartoons, Victor also demonstrated his considerable interest in commercial law as he waded undaunted through the wonders of the Income Tax Act, land titles registration, and the rigours of real estate. Best of luck, Victor!

Lory Lothian (Loriatum lexi lothianus) A member of the genus homo erectus litigatum characterized by hazel eyes, keen sense of humour, above average intelligence and engaging semi-metallic smile. Sighted with decreasing frequency in the law library at Robson Hall. Demonstrates a startling propensity to be lured into the back rows of most classes where association with the dangerous group romper roomus lexi is noted. Consumption of certain cocktails occasionally results in an uncharacteristic drooling, semi-conscious state. Known to engage in an bizarre tri-weekly pre-marital migration eastward. Expected to permanently settle in the friendly climes of Toronto, where the taking of a mate and continued ribald behaviour is expected.

Stephen Lundin The pure and innocent Kenora boy that we all knew and loved underwent a metamorphosis in second year litigation when he began sporting a "Court of Appeal" coiffure to project an image of efficiency and sophistication. But Steve, you're not fooling anyone. At lunch, Steve would feel like a school bus driver as he transported screaming herds of hungry law students to the nearest burger joint in his "boat". The pre-curling champagne breakfasts will be fondly remembered by his team. Steve will be returning to his drinking buddies in Kenora where we hope he will find some free time to fulfill his articling duties at Hook and Seller.

Brian Lerner "Senator" Lerner has set his sights on early promotion to the judiciary since his experience on the Senate Appeals Committee whetted his appetite for power. More importantly, he'll have more time to indulge his non-legal pursuits, such as tennis (we have only his word that he's good), weightlifting (res ipsa loquitur), and building his famed sweater collection (the fashion scene at Robson Hall will suffer by his departure). The learned Brian Lerner will attempt to acclimatize himself to lofty heights by articling with Aikens. Good luck, Brian!

Beth Lugsdin Beth can easily be described as the Mother Teresa of our law school and was the only one who truly worried about her Legal Aid clients! She is also famous for having done the nicest cross-examination during Litigation. With their musical talents, Beth and her soon to be hubby were the driving force behind the second-year victory at Beer 'n Skits. She will be taking her talents to Pitblado next year. We hope they are worthy of you, Beth.

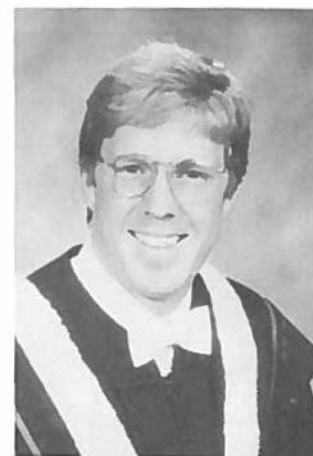

Michelle Mann Although her handwriting may lead one to believe that Michelle should have been a doctor, she possesses a characteristic essential for a good lawyer — ferocious dedication to her own point of view — and she isn't shy about sharing those points of view. Michelle is often heard complaining about her lack of funds. We really feel sorry for you, Mike — Montreal in October, Florida in December and April, Windsor for Law Games in February, Ottawa for the Jessup in February, and Europe in May! Life's rough. Michelle will be parking the Dastardly Duster in the Taylor lot next year.

Laura Martin Blond and beautiful! One look at Laura and you just knew she was destined to become a California girl. Laura has left her heart in Sacramento but will soon return as Mrs. Troy Reimche. The choice was tough because Winnipeg has given her many warm memories — food poisoning before Solicitors Transactions, a concussion from a collision with a bus, a coat hanger in the eye, and a classic wipe out at curling! When faced with another Winnipeg winter at Pitblado, she wisely chose a lifetime of fun in the sun. We certainly understand your decision, Laura, but we wish we could all be California girls!

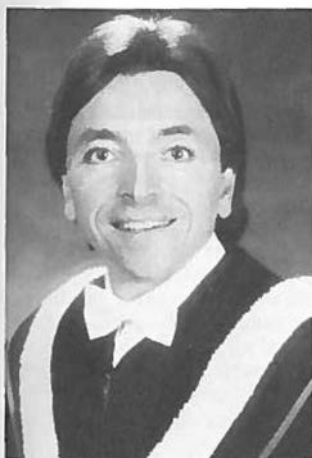

Demetra Matthews Demetra and Bill are founders of the "Night Owl Coffee Club," which explains why she never made an 8:30 class. It also explains why she didn't have a chance to brush her hair for those 11:30 classes. Demetra entertains classmates with her ability to embellish the simplest story into a riotous tale as well as with her performances in front of the video camera. Around exam time, Demetra can be heard screaming down the halls, "I'm gonna fail, I'm gonna fail!" Demetra has told us to look out for her picture in the Free Press as the first female Greek lawyer. Good luck at Simkin, Gallagher!

Jim McLandress Entered law school masquerading as a clean-cut, moderate and considerate fellow, but quickly laid that impression to rest. Robson Hall's closet thespian has determinedly pursued his acting career by portraying Ed Lipsett and Art Braid at Beer 'n Skits and by appearing as a star witness in 3 Greenbergs. Jim always seemed to carry the mark of guilt but drove everyone to tears with his creative use of garden vegetables. Gordie Dilts will no doubt always have Jim's smiling mug tattooed on his brain. For our part, we feel he deserves an Oscar for his impersonation of a law student. Jim's next appearance is scheduled for Taylor where he will be serving as understudy to the resident loon — JH.

Jim didn't manage to wear the Dean's Team cap in his years at Robson Hall, but if he had put half as much time into studying for exams as he did into dressing for them, he would have been a shoe-in for the Gold Medal.

Paul McKenna Our resident voy-ager and basketball junkie has often been mistaken for Wolf's twin brother. Paul spent his first two years at the U of Moncton before coming home and mistaking Anne Petrie for a make-up person and John Evans as a journalist. He says he is also getting married this summer. We're sure you'll be a fine addition to Simkin, Gallagher.

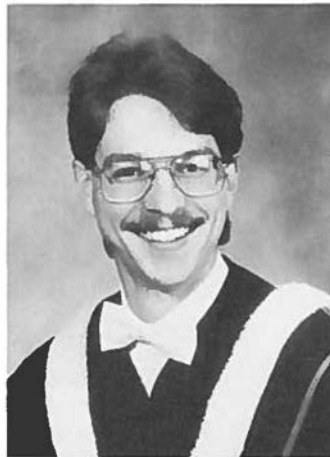

Beth McFaul A true westerner, Beth returned to Manitoba after spending two years at Osgoode Hall in Toronto. But this was not the first border she crossed. After many years of viewing the law from the "inside", Beth made the move from legal secretary to law student. Anyone who has tried to read her cryptic and detailed class notes knows that her background has proven to be useful.

A Solomon Greenberg finalist, Beth will be advocating her way through articling next year at Thompson, Dorfman, Sweatman.

Catherine Mitchell Cathy, a.k.a. Pud, is perkier than Mary Hart, but at Marg's lake, not quite as coherent in front of a video camera, and much more dangerous. One must wonder how this bleeding heart liberal will fare as a crime buster at the Department of Justice. Her election by acclamation as third-year rep was marred by her continuing quest to discover her one "no" dissenter. Her civilized pool parties often have turned "normal" law students into blood-thirsty crud players. We have confidence in her impending marriage to Dave, as long as Sidney Sheldon continues to churn out inspirational material. The only daring member of the "Truth or Dare" contestants — ask our waiter . . .

Steven Merrick Law school's token North-Ender, Steve nearly lost his self-proclaimed status by showing us all what a poor drinker he really is. He redeemed himself however by working for Legal Aid claiming to be helping his own kind. His ethics in this endeavour reinforced this notion. Once he made the Dean's Team, his goal became that of outsmarting the infamous David Deutscher — needless to say that this led to many grumpy days for Steve. So as not to leave a wrong impression, Steve is a fun, versatile guy who will be taking his many talents to Smordin Gindin next year.

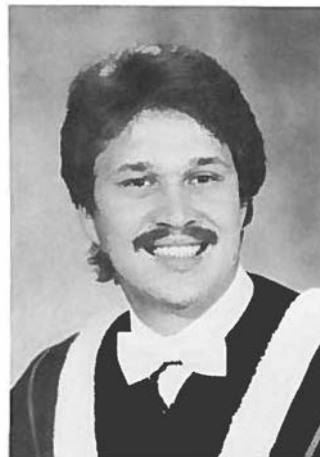

Albina Moran Albina entered law school after leaving TDS as a legal secretary. After just three short years of blood, sweat and tears, she will be returning to TDS (but at a lower salary). Albina is a conscientious hard worker although a lot of her efforts center around her beloved cat, Sasha. We find it interesting that her beater can make to those 5:30 A.M. grooming appointments but can't seem to get her to Crim. Pro. Albina will have many fond memories of law school, including food poisoning before Solicitors Transactions, a very uncooperative witness during Litigation, and consistent mispronunciations of her name.

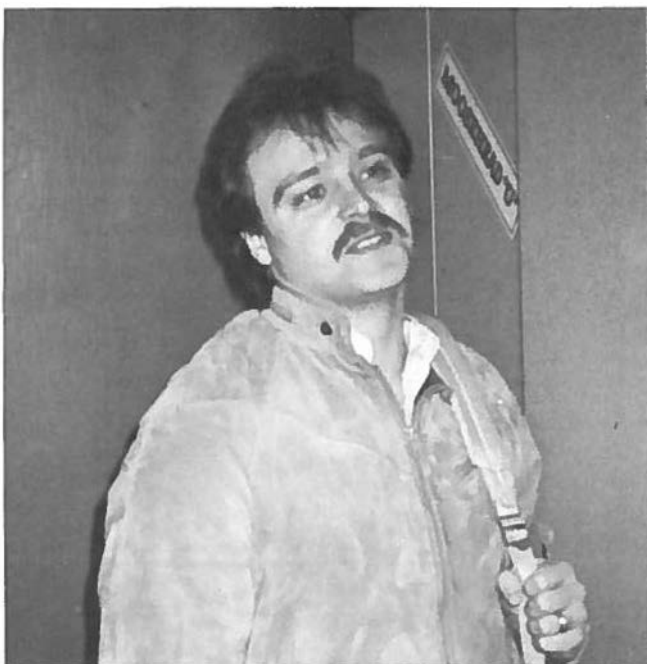

Cathryn McVeigh Our local blonde bombshell has expressed an interest in criminal law that she hopes will be indulged at D'Arcy and Deacon. Getting details about her exciting social life must be left up to the individuals willing to pay her "reasonable fee", however. We're looking forward to seeing you at work, and don't worry, you're not the only one whose parents are bribing them to go to Convocation.

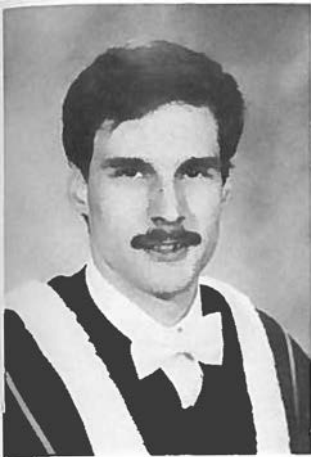

Caryl Nelson-Fitzpatrick Caryl provides proof that law school, having cute babies, and active feminism do mix, though it may take five years and a supportive spouse to be so successful. Along the way, there was time to use her past life as an accountant to overhaul the Law Journal's books — to John Irvine's considerable relief. She's known around Robson Hall for keeping profs on their toes with questions, chasing smokers out of no smoking areas, and champion exam cramming ("I never start study notes until exam week.") Caryl has put off articling, ("Boot Camp, you mean!"), to spend a year with Nathan and Rebecca, but will still be shaking things up with Women and The Law, no doubt.

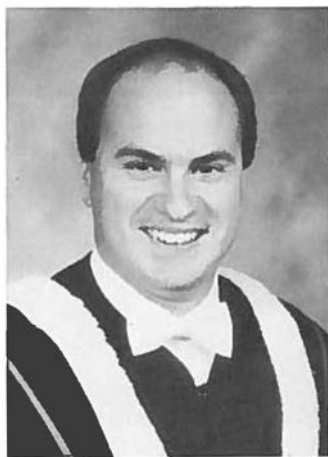

Glen Nazaruk Our Ottawa import cites his two most memorable moments at Robson Hall as being: (1) Partying with Gordie Dilts at the Squash Club until 4 A.M.; and (2) Seeing Phil Cramer elected valedictorian. We know you'll have fun charging the female Crown Attorneys while articling for the A-G.

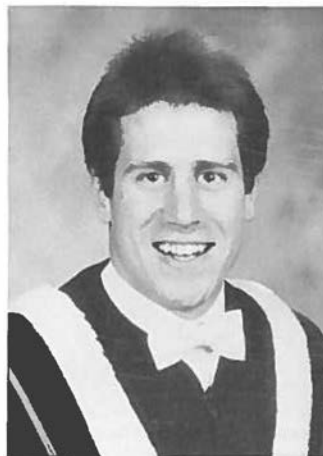

Tom Onyshko Cleverly disguised as a mild-mannered law student, Tom did a super job in an impressive variety of activities. For instance, Tom struggled with tight funding as director of PLEA, but he still successfully coordinated his dedicated staff in topics ranging from the Charter to their weekly Friday lunch excursions (once they made it as far as Transcona!) Tom contributed to the Manitoban, worked for Legal Aid, and was Administrative Editor of the Law Journal, yet still found time to study as shown by his placement on the Dean's Honour List. With a flair for writing and the heart of a poet, Tom also impressed us at Coffee House. However, don't be fooled by his calm exterior. Tom was described in Litigation as "having an iron fist in a velvet glove"! In his never-ending battle for truth and justice, Tom will be facing wilder and wilder cases next year at Wilder, Wilder, and Langtry.

Shaun Partridge A strong member of the "A" team, Shaun was always the one in the forefront leading the weekend binge (a.k.a. week long bash). Since arriving in Winnipeg, Shaun has suffered from schizophrenia (singleness in Winnipeg vs. a serious "girlfriend" in Calgary). Shaun also has chronic neck problems — we're not sure why?!!

His greatest achievement in law school was drinking spilled schnapps and tequila off a cork tray at Carlos and Murphy's. Shaun's interests in reverse order are: missing classes, water skiing and women. Though not a regular at class, he has always thrown enthusiastic support into all the "social" law school functions. Unfortunately, for his friends, he is leaving us to go to the promised land, "Alberta", to ski and article with Ghitter & Co.

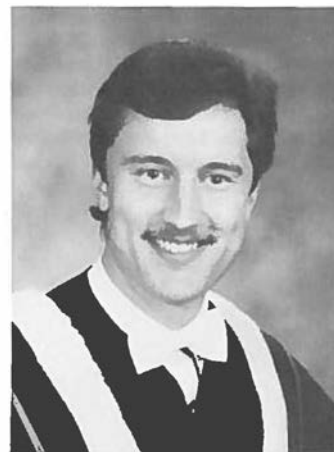

Kent Paterson The "Loogan" entered law school following in his little brother's footsteps. No one knows why he left architecture to come to Robson Hall, however during the articling interviews, he was overheard to say that he wanted to be a lawyer because he believed he did better "with his tongue than his hand." There's no doubt he was right about his talent, as evidenced by his victories in the Solomon Greenbergs and the Western Canada Finals. However, it seems there was still some life left in his hands since they managed to get him onto Trevor's Honour Roll. Furthermore, since he also got a wife and a job last year he must know how to have both of them working together. Kent spent his summers working for perennial boss, B.S., who was good enough to introduce him to his illegitimate father "Hedley". Next year, the Patersons are off to explore the mysteries of the Far East where Kent will no doubt continue his practice of exploring the depth of Marie's purse.

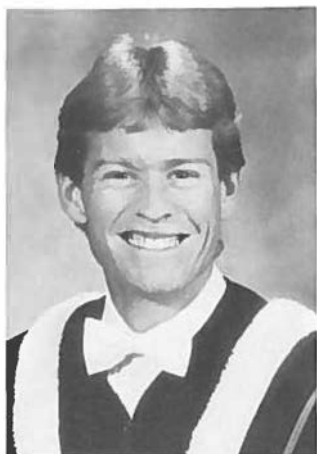

Lance Norman Opinions may vary, but all agree about one thing: the man is, in one word, unforgettable. Part one (or two?) of the dynamic duo, L.A.'s accomplishments include: Master croke player, party-goer extraordinaire, Batcave graffitoso, and survivor of numerous attempts by "friends" to pickle him.

L.A.'s next feat is to give Mr. Greenspan some "real" competition. Starting point: Simkin's. Destination: Top of the heap. Star Date: Unknown. L.A. Norman, My kind of Norman . . .

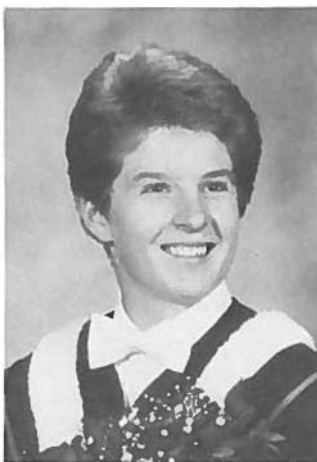

Dan Overall The years at Robson Hall have been trying for Dan. For the last two years Dan has been a part of a croke team that has displayed more choke than croke. Dan is the only law student in the history of Civil Litigation to be threatened with contempt. Dan was once trapped in the Law School elevator with only a chocolate penis, owned by Margaret Redmond, for food. This year, Dan missed an easy tip that helped secure the worst defeat ever suffered by a Law School co-ed volleyball team. Dan spent seven months growing what could be called a moustache, only to watch Professor Irvine grow a moustache in two weeks that is larger than most sheepdogs. Despite these bitter experiences, Dan is grateful to Law School for broadening his "Hur"-izons.

Cliff Proudfoot Upon first meeting Cliff, most of his fellow students assumed he was admitted through some Native advancement program. Cliff soon impressed all with the degree of his involvement in the Church. Soon however, Cliff's frequent neck sprains and constant attendance in University Center alerted the females at the U of M to the lechery which actually lurked in his heart.

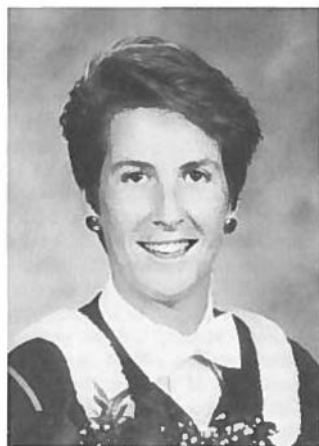

Despite being one of Robson Hall's hardest studiers, rare indeed was the party, beer bash, social or bar that could not count on Cliff's earnest support. (This earned him a place on the "A" team.) Highlights in his legal career thus far include: the Schnapps-tequila-cork mix, the Dean's List, a multitude of women, and Sambuca Night. Cliff is going to England to complete a Master's-in-Law, and is planning to return to Winnipeg to article with Fillmore & Riley.

Melanie J. Reimer This athletic "little" fireball has changed from a farm girl from Virden who wouldn't eat vegetables, to a city woman who still won't eat vegetables and lives for rice krispy cake. She will finally be separated from her "Reimer sister" when she joins Pigsbladder & Hogskins in 1988. Good luck Melanie, we know you'll do great!

Heather Proven Heather could be remembered as an able member of the Law Journal or as the dedicated pianist of the Glee Club or as the Race Manager of the Tin Man triathlon — but no — we will always remember Heather as the only person fortunate enough to get through the entire first year without having a professor call on her. Aikens McAulay got one of our best!

Margaret Redmond Margarita is best known for her gossip siren and for breaking into song at MLSA meetings: "I am not a bimbo!" Her love life is as varied as her wardrobe and as confusing as Jack London's tax class. Margaret has been a central figure in her year's Beer 'n Skits entries, often popping up in purple as Patty Carlson. Her stripping at Beer 'n Skits was but a prelude to her skinny dip at Anita's cottage. We guess Fillmore & Riley didn't get the negatives in time. They must have hired her for her mind. Scary

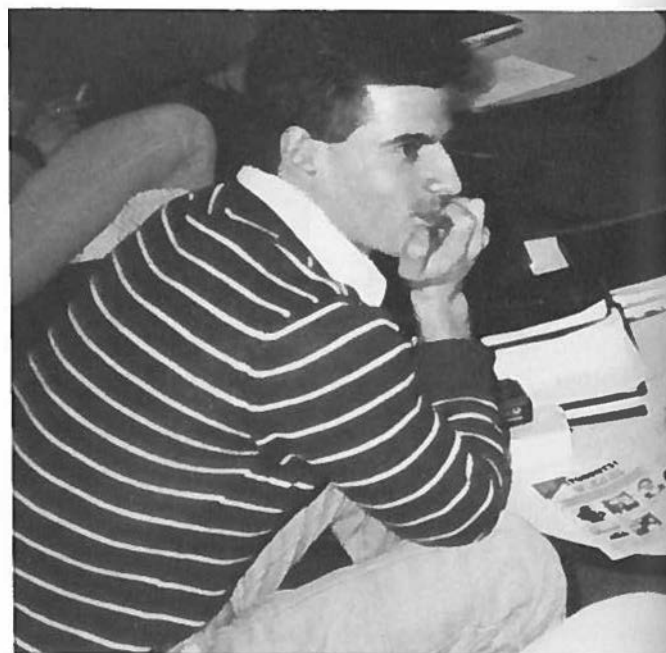

Patti Ramage Pattiwinkle is the moral minority of Robson Hall and Morals Monitor of the 1987 and 1988 Law Games Teams. Patti spent her first two years of law school threatening to drop out until she discovered there was an opening for in-house counsel at Mary Tyler Moore Enterprises. Her first major and on-going legal struggle was with Stadium Ford whom she sued for failing to install a Motown station in her Mustang. She attends all third-year parties as a free lance photographer for Hustler magazine. We're sure Tupper & Adams will appreciate Patti's right-wing approaches to life ("What Charter?"), as does her little Pauliwog.

Greg Reage Notable for his collection of bizarre t-shirts, Greg Reage spent his years in law school taking copious notes and complaining about unintelligible law profs. He was also known as an obsessive watcher of CBC's Video Hits, taking time from his studies to view the hallowed show.

Affable and zany, Greg has been seen in the library surrounded by dozens of books and hunched over some obscure report series; no doubt he was pretending to be engrossed in work while in reality he was recovering from his fantastic weekends and social events. Greg knows how to project a tactful image, but he's hardly like that in real life, earning a place in Robson Hall folklore by speaking his mind. His life-long ambition to move sompelace warm will be delayed as he will article with Legal Aid next year.

I think, therefore I am . . . I think.

Pam Reimer Pam is our favourite import from Transcona, the land of Flamingoes. She has achieved her goal in coming to law school by landing a soon-to-be rich lawyer. Pam was also the curling and general sports goddess of the class of 1988. Too bad we won't be seeing her next year, since she will be slaving at Aikins MacAulay.

Diana Rooswinkel Although we believed that Diana was a sweet girl, her "26" before the border on the trip to UND made us question this. Always willing to take a break and chill out, Diana gave up her treasured summer to work for Legal Aid which certainly stopped her from taking any breaks. Although mild mannered in class, she was quick to go for the jugular in court. Mind you, she did have some difficulty with Judge Newcombe which was reported to us by the Winnipeg Free Press.

Diana is hopping the fence and heading for the AG's Department where her good nature and fun-loving style will certainly be appreciated.

Janet Ross In addition to keeping busy, busy, busy, as a wife and mother, Janet has managed to successfully complete the "stress-test", otherwise known as three years at Robson Hall. During her three years, Janet has done a little bit of everything including curling in first year, Legal-Aid in second year, and the Law Journal in third. This "dabble-in-this, dabble-in-that" attitude has even carried over to her school work where she has managed to take quite a variety of subjects. However, having balanced her course load between commercial and litigation, Janet is now ready to handle anything Tupper & Adams can throw at her. We know you'll do well, Janet, no matter what area you settle upon and that it's only a matter of time before it will be Tupper, Adams, and Ross!

Kim Roth Don't let Kim's diminutive stature, her perfect little curls and her big green eyes fool you into believing that she is shy, quiet and unassuming. Nothing could be further from the truth. Kim's determination, her tenacious spirit together with her pursuit of excellence in everything she does has earned her recognition as one of Robson Hall's famous few Solomon Greenberg finalists and more A's than she bargained for.

Two things are certain though: one, Kim's imminent marriage; and second, Kim's successful adoption of Buchwald as her very own. Kim is certainly as proud as any parent would be as demonstrably illustrated by her distribution of Buchwald's profile-of-the-firm pamphlets as though they were cigars. Watch out Buchwald, you've just hired a prime contender in the partnership race!

Sandip Sett Known to the terrified female residents of the U of M as the "Bulldog", the law school Dr. Zhivago's problem is that he has too much fun!!! Sandip is infamous for his "Sett Sayings to Live By", which will be published in fortune cookies. High points of his legal career so far: Sambuka Night, drinking tequila like it was water, modelling pink togas, chasing and catching girls in sombreros, driving like Mario Andretti, and showing his approval for attractive females by smacking his lips. A strong member of the "A" team initially, his early exploits tired him out, and he was subsequently demoted to the "B" team in his final year.

When the Dipper is awake and motivated, he has shown himself to be a very motivated and sensitive person. He plans to help keep himself and the scum off the streets, articling with the Attorney-General's Office.

Noreen Schroeder Noreen is known as the "Shoe Queen" of the class, sporting a different pair of shoes almost every day (all available at The Bay, of course). Grant Park Mall should have a successful year, since Noreen will be shopping at every break she gets from Sinclair Edmond. She should succeed there, as long as her principal can read her writing.

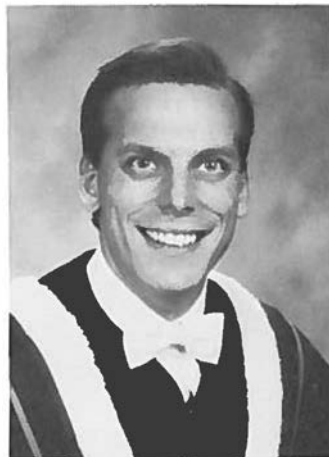

Conrado Santos Conrad enjoyed Land Titles class. He was Professor Bass' favourite student, perhaps the only one Burtie ever spoke to. After filling caveats, Conrad's favourite pastime was acting as an M.L.A. for Burrows. No doubt, Robson Hall students will remember Conrad when he becomes the next N.D.P. premier of Manitoba. Buena suerte.

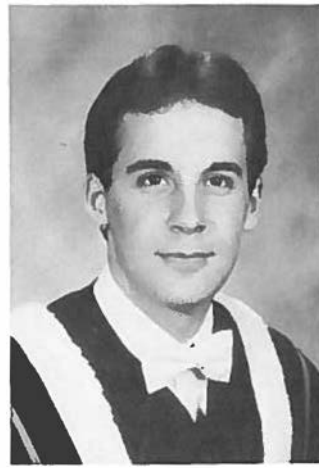

Greg Tramley None of us are quite sure what made this cowboy come to Manitoba, but we all know he's here. Well known for his calm demeanour and reluctance to make rash statements, Greg is what's known in the trade as a (great) interview. This seasoned veteran of the Legal Aid wars has certainly learned the value of "no comment". One (lousy) session with a reporter has led to a year of exile in Africa.

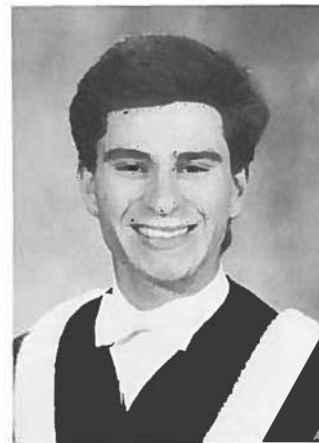

Whether it was for his Dean's List standing or his abilities as a hockey player, Greg was grabbed by Wolch Pinx in the early rounds of the "underage" draft. Little do they know he's a closet tax lawyer with a passion for fine wines, classical music and vintage automobiles. We hope they'll show him that some wines come with a cork.

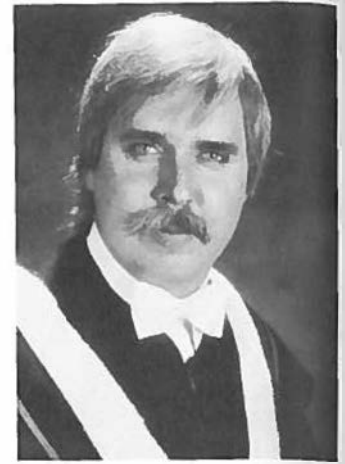

Tim Valgardson Originally from the Icelandic metropolis of Gimli, Tim became a bastion of the back row at Robson Hall. Tim's place in Robson Hall folklore was assured by graciously hosting the first post-exam party in 1st year, and then wisely abstaining from making the same mistake twice. Tim used to show up for class with purple hands and had a difficult time convincing his classmates that he was crushing grapes the night before. After washing his hands, Tim developed a keen interest in Criminal Law, and selling off his fleet of automobiles. At one point, he had aspirations of articling in B.C., but Tim enjoyed his European summer vacation so much that he opted to interview with us mortals in Manitoba. When he's not making wine in his cellar, Tim will be working at Wolchok & Company.

Maury Stephensen Although he never got any mail in his position as Robson Hall's crusading Student Ombudsman, Maury was in the enviable position of receiving numerous messages from admiring women. These messages came in many ways, such as in his mailbox, through the Manitoban's messaging, and even at the Litigation trials. However, he will never forget the message he received from Simone (of "Simone's Massage Parlour"), although we're sure he clarified his position: "Do you know what I mean?" Nevertheless, despite all the distractions, Maury did manage to take part in Grad Committee, Legal-Aid, Law Journal, etc. during his years in law school. A resident of St. James, Maury will be giving up his lofty position at the St. James Keg for the high-life of Fillmore & Riley.

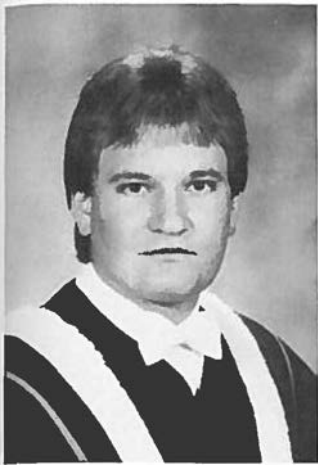

Geoff Trueman "Spin" was voted the coolest dude in Law, and without a doubt, he is the most laid-back beach bum ever to breeze into Robson Hall. Geoff prefers leaning back and soaking up the sun in class to taking any notes. His trademarks include sunglasses, muffins, Wind Surf Magazine, leather jacket, bicycle pump, and wild shorts. His ambitions are to create the "Yogi Bear International" line of beach clothing, and to find a rich girl to support his lifestyle.

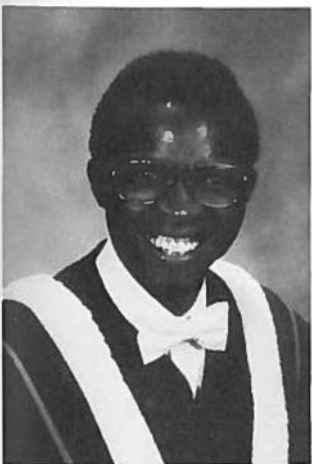

Bruce Syme A favourite corner square in Butch Nepon Constitutional Law Bingo: It was hard to go through three years at Robson Hall without becoming familiar with "The Symer". The man from the CBC had a captive audience... until orientation week ended in first year and most of the profs caught on. If he didn't become famous for his classtime outspokenness, Bruce surely gained notoriety by accumulating 8 or 9 sets of study notes for each course offered in Law School, particularly those in which he was not enrolled. He proved true the old saying "you can tell the age of the boys, by the price of their toys". Bruce also invented the effective patented "Cramer Tamer", which unfortunately will probably be prohibited from being used in the courtroom, although effective in Burtie Bass lectures. Bruce has traded in his fonts at "Switchback" for the glamorous life of articling at the A-G's Office.

Dennis Valdrón Congratulations!

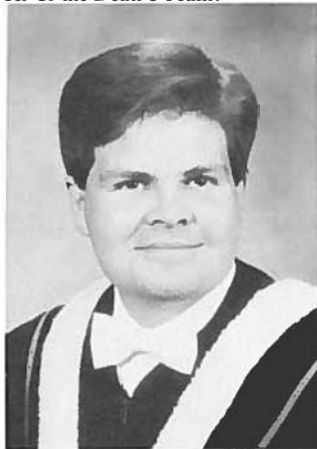

Jon van der Krabben Originally drafted out of Sturgeon Creek, "Johnny V" was called up to Robson Hall in the fall of '85. A proud Dutchman, Jon had a successful rookie campaign marred only by his Contracts prof's propensity to mispronounce his last name. Jon followed up with a sophomore season in which he missed a number of Tuesday morning games with a prolonged injury to his famous orange VW Rabbit. Jon impressed the scouts with his standout performance at the Trusts soiree. After arbitration, Jon agreed to return for 3rd year and spent most of the season on the Family Specialty Team, although he occasionally played on the Environmental/Bio Ethics Power Play. Jon became a free agent in the fall of 1987 and has signed with Smith, Neufeld for 1988-89, thus proving "it's worth the trip to Steinbach".

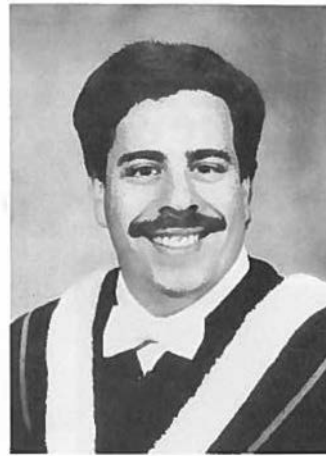

Paul Vyamacharo-Shawa Paul came to Canada from a land afar (Malawi). He calls it "the warm heart of Africa". Though it might not be as good as in Malawi, Simkin Gallagher will have its bounty, and since litigation night, he must confess that he has known worse bars than the Manitoba Bar!

Anita Wortzman Anita, a.k.a. Juanita, a.k.a. Anitra, is a quiet, unassuming sort until she spontaneously breaks into her Jimmy Durante imitation, to the joy of her friends and the chagrin of Ron. Her cottage is a den of nudity and regurgitation (Summer '86: "I shouldn't have had that second glass of wine. Must have been the M.S.G.") and her apartment the entertainment center for the L.A. Law Club and Ron's Video Zone. She is the surrogate mother for her confused friends, and her favourite refrain is "Jim, you're such a pig!" Aikens McAulay is lucky indeed to be getting a consistently top member of the Dean's Team.

Mike Williams "Scarface" Williams has, in his later life, bloomed into a first-rate party animal. Mike will be forever remembered for a hard fought battle with gravity waged one winter's eve at Strawberries. Bruised and incoherent, Mike made his way home in Thor's Taxi. "Kickback" Williams won a gruelling election campaign, posting a convincing victory over all other candidates. "Pappy" Williams is the former patriarch of the Bat Cave and keeper of the fold. "Windbag" Williams is noted for his verbose, long-winded Cam Harveyesque president's reports at MLSA council meetings. If things don't work out for Mike at Walsh, Micay, "Autopac" Williams can always find work at Princess Auto's wrecking yard.

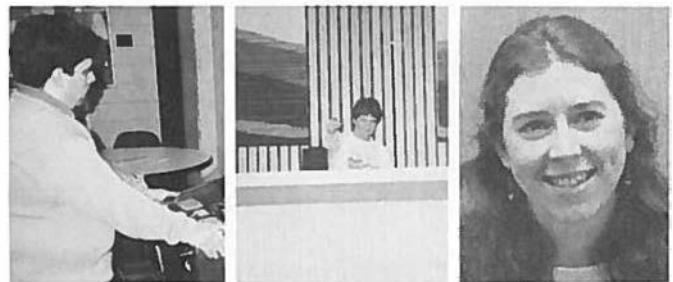

Neil Wolfish The "Wolf" was traded to Winnipeg by Harold Ballard in late August 1985 along with Leroy Bleta for future considerations (rumoured to be Hart Berger and a photocopier). "Captain Headnote" got off to a less than torrid start, getting an early unsportsmanlike conduct penalty from Scary Gerry and breaking his leg on a clean hip check outside University Centre. Undaunted, he went on to become a top-flight intermission feature host, creating such institutions as the Family Law League Standings, "Braidisms", "Bassisms", "Cambo" and "Symebo". In 3rd year Wolf proved that he was completely devoid of any Sponge Hockey goaltending abilities. Neil will be taking his multicoloured study notes to Bratty & Partners in beautiful downtown North York next year.

Teresa Wong Voted most likely to change her career goals, Teresa's interests have travelled from family law in first year, labour in second, and corporate and commercial in third, with immigration sneaking in as the next possibility. Teresa has come a long way since first year contracts. In anticipation of the "name-calling" by that oh-so "Scary - Gerry", "Miss Wong" could be found desperately searching her casebriefs for the ultimate answer to end all questions. And when the moment finally came to present her case and stand victorious, it just didn't seem come out quite right. Through the three years, Teresa has developed an ability to articulate well-reasoned arguments. From practicing with Mr. Woo on legal/medical issues, Miss Wong now takes her debating skills to TDS where she has already begun to negotiate her articling salary. $850.25?

Top Ten Reasons Why I Came To Law School At Robson Hall

as compiled by Wolf and others

10. I heard it was a great place to meet members of the opposite sex.
9. 7-11 didn't have any positions open on the day that I applied there.
8. I heard that writing five law exams in a row was good for the soul.
7. I have a sincere desire to learn the law and serve society.
6. I have a sincere desire to learn the law and make big bucks.
5. Free lockers.
4. The University of Saskatchewan didn't have a Tony Tascona art collection.
3. I heard Winnipeg had nice winters.
2. I wanted to see if Jack London looked the same when he wasn't on T.V.

And the Number One Reason why I came to Law School at Robson Hall . . .

1. Where else can you play pinball during "Ethics" class?

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

As my colleague Phil Cramer has no doubt illuminated the wonders of the law school experience, I will not dwell at length on this topic.

I would just like to thank those responsible for allowing me to embark on my year long reign of terror. (Remember y'all "elected" moi.)

All kidding aside, I would like to pass on some well earned kudos . . . I greatly appreciated the excellent work performed by the members of the M.L.S.A. Council. As well, the efforts of the various chairpersons and members of M.L.S.A. committees made our numerous events possible.

As a member of the graduating class of 1988 I would like to congratulate my fellow classmates on their achievement of surviving three years at Robson Hall. From the tedious real estate transaction in first year to the mass articling interviews in third year — you kids did it all.

As for first and second year students, keep up the good work so that you too can work 60 hours per week for $800 a month as your reward for success!

In closing I wish you all success in your future endeavours and I'll be seeing you humanoids in the funny papers.

Yours truly,

Michael T. Williams

Valedictory

Phillip Cramer

. . . Lawyers are supposed to strive for truth. Yet, much of what lawyers do is to try to downplay facts which are antithetical to their client's interest. They live to serve their clients and share their wealth of knowledge with those who request it, provided they are able to pay. Lawyers are sometimes parasites: they feed off the misfortunes of others by serving an adversarial system that does not right wrongs but fuels dissension and favours rich over poor. Lawyers manipulate blind justice to serve the ends of the rich and the ends of evil.

Lawyers, like all other humans, are capable of good and evil. Although they generally produce nothing of value, merely writ, dicta and obscure minutiae, lawyers sometimes do the right thing. However, notwithstanding all the profession's claims of altruism, all that rot about a noble profession and a glorious tradition, when lawyers advance good over evil, they do so by adhering to humanistic values and neglecting institutional legal values.

The only people fooled by the legal profession's claims of nobility and wisdom are lawyers. Real people don't believe that line of nonsense. I am not saying that lawyers are bad people and I am not saying that they are anti-human. In fact, they are human, all too human. As normal human beings, of no particular distinction, they are capable of both great generosity and petty spitefulness. They are capable of both divine vision and earth-bound greed.

I enjoin you not to adopt legalistic values. Legalistic values are shallow and are based on the absurd notion that human ills can be solved by manipulation of neutral principles and abstract rule-sanctions. Legalistic values are organized into a set of canons which I call the religion of law. The religion of law says that those in authority merit their exalted rank. The religion of law enjoins its adherents to bend their knees in displays of supine fealty in the temple of the law, before the altar of the statute book and precedent.

I say that people only deserve respect when they earn it. Fools and knaves never deserve respect, whether they are senior partners in prestigious law firms, jurists, or even ensconced beyond the impact of all reality in the Arcadian realm fulsomely referred to as "academia".

Don't get me wrong, there are good lawyers, wise judges and noble academics, but their nobility is a function of their humanity: it has nothing to do with their legal training or adherence to the religion of law. I would say most judges are relatively competent, but that is because they fall within the normal curve of human virtue and intelligence.

A few weeks ago, I read in The Globe and Mail a story about a black woman who defied the odds and graduated as a lawyer and got a job with a top Toronto law firm. She was quoted as saying that she was initially interested in criminal law but now says she doesn't have the stomach to represent criminals.

Why does she think her prospective commercial and industrial clients are better? I fail to see how Union Carbide, the asbestos industry, or the land development industry are any more palatable than criminal clients. The big boys hurt more people, more effectively, over a greater timespan, but at least they give to the arts: when was the last time a mugger sponsored PBS's "Great Performances"?

If you think that there is something inherently laudable about representing the powerful and shutting out the weak, about funnelling money to avaricious politicians who champion the interests of the development community at the expense of community welfare, I can only say, to quote our droll, but absent, colleague, Den Valdron, "Congratulations!"

The consequence of development projects is often destructive to the lives of those who eke out a meagre existence in the city's central core. Developers create suburbs. They ignore the inner city. As the suburbs expand with each peripheral housing development, the inner city decays further. The result is a weakened inner city tax base, reduced political power for inner city residents and sub-standard inner city housing, services and schools.

One result of developer greed is that many American inner city children are, for all intents and purposes, illiterate. Jonathon Kozol wrote about his experiences in the schools of a major American city. I read his Death at an Early Age about fifteen years ago, but it has stayed with me. My contempt for the politicians that Kozol described and the system that they perpetuated and the lawyers who served them was probably largely shaped by that book. I will remember that book long after I have forgotten the largely irrelevant curriculum we have endured in law school — you know what I am talking about, chimney sweeps and brooches, domesticated camel bites, the rule against perpetuities, the importance of precedent and the sanctity of the courts.

The point is that lawyers are the servants of the developers. The fruit of developers' efforts is the destruction of the city and the impoverishment of the people. If that is your cup of tea, you are going to find it bitter brew.

I suppose lawyers are sometimes on the side of the angels. But not very often. I wouldn't have any complaints with the legal profession if for every lawyer who represents developers there was one who helped residents of neighbourhoods. But the ratio is lop-sided. I would like to remind you that on every front, society is headed for disaster. One out of every six Canadian children today lives in poverty. Their ranks will spawn tomorrow's criminals. Their parents lead quiet lives of desperation and their children will lead lives of desperation — but maybe not so quietly. But we are not just screwing the poor. We are also destroying the environment, poisoning our workers, and obliterating our children's inheritance.

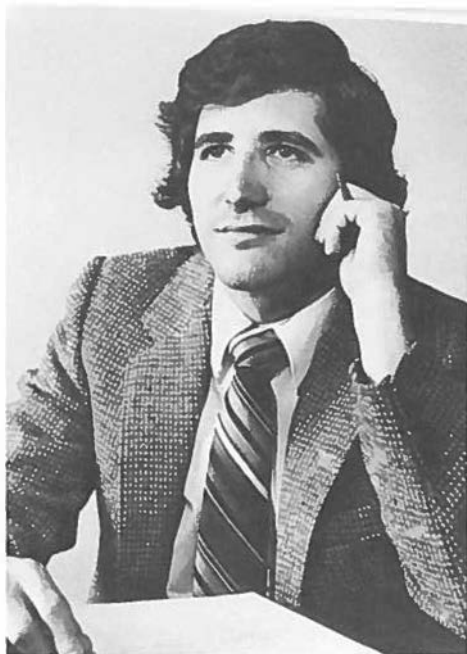

So get your VCRs and BMWs. Buy your fancy Tuxedo homes. Take your vacations in Europe. Aspire to lofty positions in the Bar Association and on the Bench, but remember your wealth will taste of dust once we have exhausted our human and natural resources.

I direct your attention to the world beyond our borders. I direct your attention to Africa. I direct your attention to Central America. I direct your attention to the Middle East. I remind you of Michael Harrington's charge that Western wealth is largely dependent on Third World squalor. We exploit our people, but it is nothing compared to what we do to the people of the Third World. One day, the people of the Third World are going to tell us we can't steal their natural resources and feed off their labour. What will happen when they say 'enough'? I'll tell you. We will suffer a terrible crash. Your big house won't mean much then. We won't have the energy to heat it. We won't have the food to feed your children.

In conclusion, I enjoin you to admire the courageous and not the rich. I enjoin you to award your respect to the meritorious and not the privileged. I enjoin you to refuse to do dirty work for powerful clients. I enjoin you to look to the long run. I enjoin you to make personal sacrifice. I enjoin you to look out for those who are least able to look out for themselves.

You have a choice. You can buck the system — provided enough of you share a vision of social justice. You can take a leap of faith and transcend the institutional value system favoured by the guardians of the legal tradition. Or, you can adopt the sanctimonious, self-righteous, self-congratulatory attitude of the legal profession, ignore social inequity and descend into hell. The choice is yours, but the consequences will be shared by all.

Toast To The Class Of '88

- by E. Arthur Braid

*Tis a pleasure 'tis true to be here with you on this evening for mem'ries and fun;
you're here with your buddies, they'll be no more studies till bar ad course has begun.*

*'Tis an honour I'll boast to deliver the toast on such an auspicious occasion;
I appealed to the muse
for a poem to use or perhaps for the perfect quotation.*

*Do you not remember way back in September of nineteen and eighty-five; there were ninety fresh faces
all looking up cases like worker bees locked in a hive.
Assignments caused terror
nit-picked for error
'Twas enough to make you anginal;
but you all were aghast the worst was the last the dreaded one hundred mark final.*

*'Twas the job of the staff to winnow the chaff and cause the enrolment to drop;
by second year's dawn
twelve classmates had gone leaving only the cream of the crop.*

*The best of the rest proceeded to test
second year's tempting delights;
Of Deutscher and Braid
you were somewhat afraid but London he gave you the frights.*

After Osborne and Irvine second year was disturbin' your energy level it wilts;

*but great exultation
you've got Litigation
thank heavens for Sir Gordie Dilts.
You all managed to clear your courses that year with spirits surprisingly hearty;
a miraculous sight
when viewed in the light of your insatiable penchant to party.
Third year was a breeze with options to please an appetite ever so finical;
some made their plans
eschewing exams hooray for the eight-hour clinical.*

*Dare I to mention the trauma and tension that pervaded articling week; forget it — the fact is you did get some practice in dressing up fancy and neat.
Your studies are done grad's farewell it has come a time for congrats and applause;
your great dedication to your education will make you all Bach'lors of Laws.*

So . . .

*I've come to the time for the end of my rhyme
the moment of which you've been thinking; for now it is meet that we rise to our feet and prepare for some ritual drinking.
Fill your glasses with wine we'll drink to this fine group of people with prospects so great;
I now raise my glass to this wonderful class TO THE CLASS OF EIGHTY-EIGHT.*

Yearbook Committee Editor's Message

There are three types of students in this faculty: those who use cameras, those who mug for them, and those with a highly developed avoidance reaction (extending to nervous scowls and, in extreme cases, actionable assault). Nevertheless, I think we captured evidence of the year's major events fairly well, and this book will someday become a treasured property in your library. My specific comments do not concern the contents, but the cover.

For those of you that still have nightmares about tax lectures or exams, my apologies. This year's gold-on-red motif had begun its progress through the publishing system before I realized that it might evoke horrible memories of the Stikeman edition.

Please note, also, that the cover does not depict the Golden Boy, which would be far too sexist. All masculine outlines have been methodically blurred in conformance with s. 15 of the Charter, and we now unveil a Manitoban design in touch with today's constitutional realities: the androgynous Golden Person! A contract to melt down and re-cast the historical figure atop our Legislative Building only awaits administrative approval.

Finally, I would like to thank all members of the Yearbook Committee, who abandoned friends and family, working through May and June to lay out hundreds of pictures. I trust the organization of the book will meet previous standards.
