Comma Splices and Run-On Sentences

Writing a complete sentence with proper punctuation is often a challenge for students at any stage of their writing experience. Two common errors that students make are commas splices and run-on sentences, which are errors that incorrectly link two independent clauses.

An independent clause is a phrase that has a subject and a verb and makes complete sense on its own. It is a complete thought. For example: “The student reads.”

Comma Splices
Comma splices occur when two independent clauses are incorrectly linked by a comma.

Family Day is a statutory holiday in many Canadian provinces, the day is called Louis Riel Day in the province of Manitoba.

Run-On Sentences
Run-on sentences occur when more than one independent clause is in a sentence without the correct punctuation or conjunctions.

Family Day is a statutory holiday in many Canadian provinces the day is called Louis Riel Day in the province of Manitoba.

Five Ways to Fix Comma Splices and Run-On Sentences

1. Use a period
   Family Day is a statutory holiday in many Canadian provinces. The day is called Louis Riel Day in the province of Manitoba.

2. Use a semicolon
   Family Day is a statutory holiday in many Canadian provinces; the day is called Louis Riel Day in the province of Manitoba.

3. Use a comma and coordinating conjunction
   Family Day is a statutory holiday in many Canadian provinces, but the day is called Louis Riel Day in the province of Manitoba.
   Note: One quick and easy way to remember coordinating conjunctions is the acronym FANBOYS: For, And, Nor, But, Or, Yet, So.

4. Use a subordinating clause
   Whether Canadians call it Family Day or Louis Riel Day, it is a statutory holiday throughout most of the country.
5. Use a period or semicolon and a coordinating adverb

Family Day is a statutory holiday in many Canadian provinces. However, the day is called Louis Riel Day in the province of Manitoba.
